SUSTAINABLE DESIGN

Are you interested in everyday beauty, responsible production, sustainable textiles and traceability of the materials? Do you enjoy soft, warm wool, shimmering linen and a casual, but yet a cool modern home? Then this magazine is just for you.

We at Lapuan Kankurit value sustainable development and pure natural materials. Our philosophy also includes responsible and environmentally friendly processes, continuous research and development – not to mention our fantastic designers.

Did you know that our linen textiles are woven in Lapua, Finland? We employ local craftsmen, and our refined weaving skills are transformed from one generation to another. In fact, our most long-standing employee worked in our weaving mill for over forty years.

When it comes to our products, multifunctional is what it's all about. There is no right or wrong way to use our products: blankets can also be used as tablecloths or space dividers. When well maintained, high-quality textiles will make you happy for decades, which means you can also leave a lasting inheritance for future generations. Products made by Lapuan Kankurit weave a tale of genuine values, sustainable consumption and respect for nature.

In this magazine, we have picked some of our best products for you. We want you to be inspired, pamper your soul, have a cosy home and enjoy our sustainable design. Let yourself find your unique way of making the world a little bit better, every day.

We have a wide selection of our own products and other interesting, delightful lifestyle items that breathe our values – buy them for yourself, as a gift or to remind you of your visit to Finland.

LAPUA OUTLET STORE

In October 2015, we opened our new outlet store in Lapua, at the culture centre Vanha Paukku. Our spacious and charming store is located in the cultural centre Vanha Paukku. We're using the former tool factory premises of Lapua Ammunition Factory (Lapuan Patruunatehdas) – a company that owned and used the buildings until a dramatic accident took place in the factory premises in April 1976.

The former factory complex nowadays houses a number of shops and entrepreneurs, a 200 seat Alajoki auditorium, meeting rooms, a cafeteria, a movie theatre, a local theatre group, the Lapua Art Museum and the municipal library. The factory surroundings also offer a home for the Music Institute and the Adult Education Centre of Lapua – and of course the historical museum of the Lapua Ammunition Factory.

HELSINKI STORE & STUDIO

Lapuan Kankurit Store&Studio in Helsinki is located in the Tori Quarter – a unique Empire style centre at the heart of Helsinki between the Helsinki Cathedral and the Market Square, just five minutes from the Central Railway Station and other major landmarks.

The Tori Quarter has many design shops, restaurants, coffee houses, services, museums and summer terraces. It is a fascinating destination for domestic and international visitors to enjoy urban life, shopping, dining and culture. Formerly an area housing mostly administrative offices, the streets and inner courtyards of the district have now been transformed into an area offering relaxation and novel experiences with pedestrian access.

The foggy fields welcome the visitor into Johanna Talso and Juha Koskela's home. The surroundings seem to celebrate the couple whose artisanal lifestyle is built on the appreciation of nature and tradition.

Johanna organises an annual craft fair where artisans and customers meet in 18th century historical surroundings, and sews historically accurate clothing from linen fabrics. "I grew up on a farm, so the landscape of my soul is a field," Johanna says.

When duty calls, Johanna doesn't count the hours. Ideas follow her everywhere she goes, and she sees that as a blessing. "An artisan's mind works differently," Johanna says and laughs. "We're a little weird like that." Her husband Juha Koskela is an awarded goldsmith, so craftsmanship is always present in their life.

Timeless, long-lasting materials and products have a special role in Johanna's life. She appreciates design and objects that endure. "They're not confined to present moment," she says. Textiles that can be passed down to future generations are valuable to her. In fact, she reveals that she still has some of the original linens designed by the world-renowned textile artist Dora Jung in the 1960s. The beauty of the linens hasn't faded over time. Lapuan Kankurit is currently reviving Jung's designs according to the original drawings and instructions, proving that their elegance really does span generations.

Johanna uses authentic materials, because they look and feel right. She sews clothing from Lapuan Kankurit linen fabrics, and Juha uses precious metals in his jewellery. "Tradition, history, nature, and authenticity all go hand in hand," Johanna says. The couple agrees that they didn't understand the significance of traditions when they were younger. "Now those strong values are more present in Finnish culture", Juha analyses. Johanna says that her family has always saved fun, beautiful, or handmade items. "I have my great-grandmother's linen tablecloths, and they're still in great condition," she smiles. She hopes that families continue to pass down items that are made to stand the test of time.

While craftsmanship is valued in Finland and all over the world, it still remains a marginal phenomenon. "Is it a trend to value craftsmanship, or is it really valued?" Johanna wonders. The pricing of handmade crafts is still occasionally debated. However, trendsetting magazines have also started to introduce artisanal products. "Crafts will always compete with mass-produced items," Juha adds. He's noticed that people also value individuality, and that's when trendy labels don't matter: "People want to create their unique appearance with clothing and jewellery." Johanna and Juha don't seem worried about craftsmanship disappearing altogether. "It'll always be there, sometimes stronger and sometimes weaker," Juha says. "They're appreciated more, because people don't make crafts themselves anymore."

As craftswoman and organiser of the 18th century craft fair, Johanna has experiences both sides of the artisanal community. It might be a small group of people, but special at that: "The artisanal community is close-knit," she smiles. Juha agrees. "There's a small group of people who don't want to fit in," he says, "and that's what we call craftsmanship."

INVESTING IN the Future

This innovative export company is making a big investment of almost 2 million euros at its weaving mill in Lapua in 2016–2018. By doing so, Lapuan Kankurit is proving that the textile industry in Finland is alive and well.

Esko Hjelt, the CEO of Lapuan Kankurit, is putting corporate responsibility into action and believes that the inspiring story of Finnish know-how will bear fruit worldwide. His belief is backed up by hard facts: over the last accounting period alone, the company's exports grew by 50%, and now make up more than half of its revenue. The company's designer textiles are selling particularly well in Asia and Central Europe.

"We stand out in the global market, because we have woven truly forward-looking characteristics into our fabrics and we offer high-quality, well-finished designs. Our whole business concept is based on our own production, continuous product development, cooperation with top designers and our own technical innovations," says Hjelt.

LARGE INVESTMENTS BRING JOBS FOR LOCALS

To ensure continuous product development and growth, the family business with 4.7 million euros of revenue wants to invest almost two million euros specifically in Finland over the next two years.

"We will be investing in our core know-how: the extension of the weaving mill in Lapua, the preliminary work stages of weaving, new jacquard looms, fabric finishes and digitalization," Hjelt explains.

The European suppliers of the textile machinery and equipment are an important part of Lapuan Kankurit's network of partners. Together with local mechanical engineering and installation experts in South Ostrobothnia, the machine manufacturers make a valuable contribution to product innovations at the company's weaving mill in Lapua. The investments will expand the mill by about a third, with a local building company in charge of the construction. In terms of building materials and equipment, Lapuan Kankurit puts its trust in Finnish suppliers. The neighbouring area has plenty of building expertise and building material and equipment industry on offer.

"Although we operate globally these days, we want to continue to provide employment for people in Finland and in this way to implement our corporate responsibility," says Hjelt. "I firmly believe that the basic concepts behind Lapuan Kankurit's business operations will carry us through also in the future: keeping control of our own production, continuous product development, our own technical innovations and collaboration with top designers."
